This template is designed as a two column table. It has a narrow column on the left with a colored background and a wide column on the right with no background color. The top portion of the newsletter before the first article consists of four rows that contain the masthead and date information.

Typically, tables have lines between the rows and columns. However, some tables in this template are formatted with hidden lines. To reveal the underlying rows and columns of a table, click Show Gridlines on the Table menu. This feature is especially helpful when you're not sure if your document has tables in it or not.

You can change the colors of rows and columns by clicking the area you want to change, clicking Borders and Shading on the Format menu, clicking the Shading tab, and then picking a color. At this point, you should specify whether you want the shading to apply to just the text, the selected paragraph(s), the whole cell, or the entire table.

The dark blue rule that appears over a headline is a characteristic of the headline's paragraph: It's formatted to have a dark blue rule above it. This and all the other characteristics of this paragraph are identified as a paragraph style named Heading 2. The first headline in this newsletter does not have a rule since it appears at the beginning of the newsletter. It's a style called Heading 1.
